

Washington Health Professional Services (WHPS)

The American Nurses Association Code of Ethics recognizes the duty to take action to protect patients by reporting concerns and to ensure the potentially impaired nurse receives assistance. This includes supporting the return to practice of nurses who have sought assistance and are ready to return to practice. Creating an environment that encourages reporting is vital to reducing stigma, rehabilitating the nurse, and protecting the public. This approach is consistent with just culture, which encourages a response to the nurse's illness while maintaining accountability.

In addition, nurses may voluntarily participate in WHPS without being referred by the board. Nurses voluntarily participating are not subject to disciplinary action for their substance abuse, and their participation is not made known to the board as long as they meet WHPS requirements. Voluntary participation carries the advantage of immediate intervention and referral to treatment, bypassing what may otherwise be a long legal process before formal intervention. When there is no potential of patient harm, healthcare professionals and employers may meet statutory reporting requirements by referring a nurse directly to WHPS. Estimates are approximately 15% of nurses may be diagnosed along the substance use disorder continuum.

Substance use disorder is a chronic, progressive disease that, if left untreated, can be fatal. However, substance use disorder is treatable and treatment outcomes improve when the disease is identified early. When treatment is individually tailored to meet the nurse's needs and an appropriate, supportive monitoring program is in place, nurses in recovery can practice safely and contribute to public health.

The Washington State Board of Nursing (WABON) recognizes the need to establish a means of providing early identification and treatment options for nurses whose competency may be impaired due to substance use disorder. WABON intends that such nurses be treated and their treatment monitored so that they can return to, or continue to practice their profession in a manner that safeguards the public. The Washington Health Professional Services (WHPS) program is the board's approved substance use monitoring program www.nursing.wa.gov/whps. WABON may refer nurses to WHPS as part of disciplinary action, or as an alternative to discipline if there is no patient harm.

The board regulates the competency and quality of nurses under its jurisdiction by establishing, monitoring, and enforcing qualifications for licensing, consistent standards of practice, continuing competency mechanisms, and discipline. In accordance with the National Council of State Boards of Nursing, the board supports the rehabilitation of nurses with substance use disorder through early identification, referral for treatment, and monitoring.
