Summary of Feedback

Aligning with NCSBN Model

Rules: Support for aligning WA rules with national standards.

Challenges with English Proficiency Exams: Cost, accessibility, and varying types of tests.

Impact on Workforce and

Licensure: Testing requirements delay licensure and impact workforce shortages.

Alternative Pathways to Demonstrate Proficiency: Work experience in another health profession role (1,000+ hours) could be an alternative.

Discussion

1. Should the board maintain or remove the English Proficiency Exam (EPE) requirement for applicants educated outside the US?

Note: The board cannot remove this requirement from RN/LPN compact licensure as it is required by the Nurse Licensure Compact (NLC). RN/LPN multistate licensure applicants educated outside the US must take an EPE under the Uniform Licensure Requirements (ULR).

The board could use the same language as the ULRs for a single licensure standard or offer a separate standard for Washington only.

2. If the board chooses to maintain the English Proficiency Exam requirement (for both single-state and multistate licensure), should the board align with the national standard (NCSBN model rules)?

Instead of exempting applicants from specific countries, the board would only require an EPE from applicants whose nursing education program was not taught in English.

3. How can we make this requirement more accessible?

Suggestions we've heard so far:

- Lower passing scores
- Passage of the NCLEX
- Allow for “super scoring” – to retake only those elements of the exam that did not meet the passing score
- RN Refresher Program as an alternative exception
- 1,000+ work hours in another health profession rule in another US state or US territory.
- Offer a restricted license
